Timeless design with a New Cast
It is my great pleasure to welcome you to Hawaii Opera Theatre’s 50th Anniversary Season. It’s incredible to think that 50 years ago a fledgling opera company was gearing up for the first performance in its history, Madama Butterfly at McKinley High School. A lot has changed over these past five decades - a small company with a board that worked backstage and behind the scenes has given way to a fully professional company featuring some of the greatest voices of our time.

Over 400 people work directly on the productions that you will see in this season. Many of those are paid professionals hailing from all areas of the globe—directors, conductors, designers, artists and musicians...all at the height of their craft. Another very large cadre of this number will be made up of community volunteers, from the chorus and supernumeraries on the stage to the hospitality, wig and makeup, and security detail backstage. HOT has a long tradition of volunteers filling key roles during the season activities and we believe it is one of the greatest assets of the company. The sense of ohana that has come from this close-knit, committed group is truly extraordinary as well. Visiting artists often call years in advance to be considered for a return trip to the HOT stage...not only because they want to work with our world-class artists and musicians, but also because HOT hospitality is legendary in the opera field.

As we pass this milestone we believe our future is brighter than ever. Many of you know we moved into new headquarters on Beretania Street this past spring. If you have not had a chance to see the newly minted Hawaii Opera Plaza (HOP) and the opera offices, please drop by; it’s a wonderful space. We also have plans to continue our expansion at HOP with a new rehearsal hall that will be built on the roof of the existing parking structure. It’s an exciting new chapter as we embark upon our next 50 years...and of course, all of these exciting projects and productions could not take place without all of you, our patrons and donors.

We have always enjoyed great support from this community and have worked hard to make sure that the dollars you graciously offer to support us are used wisely. We would not be here today without you, our volunteers and board, our artists and staff...and all of those who played each of those roles before.

Thank you all and enjoy this season’s performances!

WINTER AT LAST!
From the day The Marriage of Figaro was created by Wolfgang Mozart and Lorenzo da Ponte in May 1786, the opera has never disappeared from the standard opera repertoire all over the world. Its genius was immediately recognized by audiences and singers alike and today every season a lot of new Figaro-productions are created in North America, Europe, South America and more and more also in Asia.

Mozart and Da Ponte took a risk when they chose a notorious play by French playwright Beaumarchais for their libretto. King Louis XVI of France himself ordered his censors to forbid performances of the play because he found it ‘‘a mockery of everything that had to be respected’. The King was afraid that plays like Figaro’s Marriage would undermine the position of the French nobility including himself. He was right and only three years later he was removed from his throne during the French revolution and later executed together with his wife Marie Antoinette, daughter of the Emperor of Austria.

I do not think Mozart and Da Ponte intended to make a political statement with their adaptation of the Beaumarchais play. They actually removed some of the most explosive political passages. In particular, Da Ponte replaced Figaro’s climactic speech against inherited nobility and assured the Emperor himself that Mozart and he had no intention to insult anybody.

So, why were Lorenzo and Wolfgang so attracted to the play? The answer lies in the other two operas they created together: Don Giovanni and Così fan tutte. In their first collaboration, they introduce the theme that returns in their two other works: the force of physical attraction or simply said, lust versus love. In Figaro, not only are the page Cherubino and the Count controlled by their hormones, but the Countess and Susanna are also trapped in a situation that involves physical attraction. In the last play of Beaumarchais about Figaro (The Guilty Mother 1792) we can read that the Contessa has a child not from her husband but from… Cherubino. Such a development would not have been strange in “Dynasty” or “Dallas” or any other soap opera.

Mozart’s Marriage of Figaro has a second title that most people do not know: La folle journée…The crazy day. I find that subtitle very important because our story starts early morning and ends about 24 hours later in a park. Within this time span, we witness an incredible amount of funny, crazy, tragic, unbelievable and unpredictable events. Mozart and Da Ponte called the work an ‘opera buffa’. It is indeed a brilliant comedy and, like comedies by Shakespeare, it is not only funny but also tells us a lot about how men and women deal with the power of love and lust…. This is not only found in Da Ponte’s text but most of all in Mozart’s music. We can hear extensively what the characters feel or think through their music. That was Mozart’s music revolution because with his genius he makes every person in the opera a three dimensional and real human being.

ACT I. A country estate outside Seville, the servants’ quarters. While preparing for their wedding, the valet Figaro learns from the maid Susanna that their employer, Count Almaviva, has designs on her. At this the servant vows to outwit his master. Before long Doctor Bartolo enters with his housekeeper, Marcellina, who wants Figaro to marry her to cancel a debt he cannot pay. After Marcellina and Susanna trade insults, the amorous adolescent page Cherubino, arrives, reveling in his infatuation with all women. He hides when the Count shows up, who is furious because he caught Cherubino flirting with Barbarina, the gardener’s daughter. The Count pursues Susanna but conceals himself when music master Don Basilio enters the room.

ACT II. Boudoir of Countess Almaviva. The Countess laments her husband’s waning love but plots to chasten him, encouraged by Figaro and Susanna. They will send Cherubino, disguised as Susanna, to a romantic assignation with the Count. Cherubino, smitten with the Countess, appears, and the two women begin to dress the page for his farcical rendezvous. While Susanna goes out to find a ribbon, the Count knocks at the door, furious to find it locked. Cherubino quickly hides in a closet, and the Countess admits her husband, who is skeptical of her story that Susanna is inside the wardrobe. He takes his wife to fetch some tools with which to force the closet door. Meanwhile, Susanna, having observed everything secretly, helps Cherubino out a window, then takes his place in the closet. Both Count and Countess are amazed to find her there. All seems well until the gardener, Antonio, storms in with crushed geraniums from a flowerbed below the window. Figaro, who has run in to announce that everything is ready for his wedding is ready, pretends it was he who jumped from the window, faking a sprained ankle. Marcellina, Bartolo and Basilio burst into the room waving a court summons for Figaro, which delights the Count, as this gives him an excuse to delay the wedding.

ACT III. In an audience room. Susanna leads the Count on with promises of a rendezvous in the garden. The nobleman, however, grows doubtful when he spies her conspiring with Figaro; he vows revenge. Marcellina is astonished but thrilled to discover that Figaro is in fact her long-lost natural son by Bartolo. Mother and son embrace, provoking Susanna’s anger until she too learns the truth. Finding a quiet moment, the Countess recalls her past happiness, then joins Susanna in composing a letter that invites the Count to the garden that night. Later, during the marriage ceremony of Figaro and Susanna, the bride manages to slip the letter, sealed with a hatpin, to the Count. He drops the pin by accident but Figaro retrieves it.

ACT IV. A corridor, later in a moonlit garden. Barbarina, after trying to find the lost hatpin, tells Figaro and Marcellina about the coming assignation between the Count and Susanna. Figaro inveighs against women and leaves, missing Susanna and the Countess, ready for their masquerade. Alone, Susanna rhapsodizes on her love for Figaro, but he, overhearing, thinks she means the Count. Susanna hides in time to see Cherubino woo the Countess — now disguised in Susanna’s dress — until Almaviva chases him away and sends his wife, who he thinks is Susanna, to an arbor, to which he follows. By now Figaro understands the joke and makes exaggerated love to Susanna in her Countess disguise. The Count returns, seeing, or so he thinks, Figaro with his wife. Outraged, he calls everyone to witness his judgment, but then the real Countess appears and reveals the ruse. Grasping the truth at last, the Count begs her pardon. So ends this “crazy day” at the court of the Almavivas.

Opera Insights

on The Marriage of Figaro

by Kelley Rourke, Opera America Magazine

Le Nozze di Figaro keeps regular company with the bloodier operas usually found on the operatic "Top 10" and, next to favorites like Tosca and Rigoletto, it seems like a sweet — even bland — throwback. But this work, the combined effort of a revolutionary, a rake, and a rascally genius, contains some pointed social commentary — not to mention virtually perfect musical characterizations and groundbreaking use of the ensemble.

In 1784, the playwright Beaumarchais penned La Folle journée ou Le Mariage de Figaro, a sequel to his successful Le Barbier de Séville (later set to music by Rossini and Paisiello). The play, with its pointed barbs at the ruling class, caused an uproar, predictably exciting the people and infuriating the nobles.

Although the play was banned from the Viennese stage, Mozart and his librettist, Lorenzo Da Ponte, recognized a good story when they found one and were not the types to shrink from controversy. (They were also clever enough to fashion a libretto that could pass muster with the censors.) Da Ponte, the well-read, social-climbing son of a tanner, wrote numerous librettis for Mozart, Salieri, Soler, and other contemporary composers. He also left memoirs, poems, numerous translations and assorted prose. If his memoirs are to be believed, his prodigious verbal output was matched only by his romantic conquests, but most remember him chiefly for the three librettis he provided for Mozart: Le Nozze di Figaro, Così fan tutte and Don Giovanni.

Le Nozze di Figaro was Mozart and Da Ponte’s first operatic collaboration. Mozart began work on the music in 1785; the opera had its premiere in Vienna the following year. Its treasures are many, beginning with arias reflecting the many facets of love: Cherubino’s eager adolescent yearning, the Countess’s bittersweet recollection of a love lately lost and finally Susanna’s seductive invitation, "Deh vieni," which manages to be both archly teasing and sweetly sincere. Other sketches are equally deft, from jealous Figaro’s malicious minuet, "Se vuol ballare," to silly Barbarina’s mock-tragic lament over a lost pin. (Mozart also composed two brilliant musical parodies in fourth-act star turns for Marcellina and Basilio; however, these are often cut on the grounds that they slow the movement toward the denouement.) For all the glories in the procession of arias, the real magic lies in the ensembles. Figaro’s plot is a maze of misunderstandings, disguises and machinations; Mozart neatly untangles the knots for further confuses things, when appropriate), all the while weaving together several voices, each with perfect musical-emotional pitch.

Le Nozze di Figaro was apparently well-received from the start. The emperor saw the need to ban excessive encores during performance. Before the end of the 18th century, it had been seen in Florence, Amsterdam and Paris, as well as Prague, Leipzig, Graz and Frankfurt. To this day, it remains a favorite among opera lovers worldwide.
